SUMMER BOARDERS

We sat upon the little porch. Each following the wonted way Where thought or memory leads, Or mayhap only tongue. If lamps were lit A myriad winged things flew round. So we preferred to sit and talk And rock to stay our yawns. Among our band one had been caught abroad When war began. So we heard how our consuls failed

In those stressed times.

And that led on to foreign tours;

And those who'd toured And those who'd stayed at home

Told of the wonders of the Alns

Or how our Rockies dwarfed Swiss hills, Of pensions and our great dining cars.

Up from the freshness of the wayside fields There came soft breaths of air, sound-filled: The faint tinkle of far-off bells

Where cows browsed through the night;

And lone birds now and then, Piping just a note or two

As loath to settle into silence till the dawn; And far across the little vale,

Where one small window gleamed As if a star had falling,

Caught, and burned amid the branches of a tree. Someone thrummed the Prelude of Rachmaninoff. The rhythm beat across the valley as in waves

And, washing up to where we sat, Chattering of plays, and hats and wines,

Flowed back again, Leaving us untouched and smug As those who sit upon a sanded beach Seeking for beauty within a book

And never looking out upon the changing sea. MURDOCK PEMBERTON.

The minority embraced the House of Commons and the Conservative members from Quebec, who are opposed to conscription. Before the division was taken the Prime Minister declared that unless there was substantial unanimity in the Commons he would not forward the resolution to the Senate or to the imperial authorities. It was held that to ask the Imperial Parliament to ratify a resolution carried only by a party majority would involve British ministers in the domestic politics of Canada and provoke mischievous attack and recrimination.

There are those, however, who contend that the Canadian Parliament should not require imperial sanction for such legislation. It is understood that there is no such provision in the Australian constitution. Again and again the British Parliament has extended its life since the war began. There is no sound reason why the Canadian Parliament should not have equal and complete sovereignty. It is certain that the British government.

Canadian Parliament should not have equal and complete sovereignty. It is certain that the British government sets no value upon its right of veto and is averse to any suggestion of interference with the legislative autonomy of the Dominions.

Twenty-five Vacant Commons Seats

But possibly the government was not seriously averse to a general election. There are now twenty-five vacant seats in the House of Commons. In the first year of the war seats which became vacant by death or otherwise were filled by agreement between the parties without a contest. But two Conservative members were required by the Prime Minister to withdraw from Parliament owing to doubtful transactions with the Department of Militla, and the Opposition, probably suspecting that the discredited members would offer for reelection, would not agree that the constituencies should be uncontested. This terminated the agreement to fill vacancies by consent, and for more than two years there have been no by elections save for ministers who are obliged by the constitution to be relected on appointment to office.

Not only are there twenty-five vacancies in Parliament, but the West is grossly under-represented. In 1914 there was a redistribution of constituencies which reduced the representation of the English-speaking Vote of this will be unstanted when the connocition of the English-speaking in the House of the vertice of this will be unstanted when the connocition of the English-speaking of the angular automatics and the desired when the connocition of the English-speaking of the angular automatics and the derivative election, in which commend as keenly consents and which was as keenly contested as any election since Confederation, 1307,528 to save were polled. German and Austrian, and between the parliament owing to doubtful transactions with the United States was the chief issue and which was as keenly contested as any election of the vectors with the United States was a keenly conteste which the West was entitled before the last general election. Thus there are actually not twenty-five but forty-seven vacancies in Parliament and proportionate under-representation of the West in the Senate, since until the redistribution of 1914 takes effect additional Senators for the newer provinces cannot be appropried.

"Lucia di Lammermoor" was last night's opera at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, and another capacity audience applauded as only an Italian audience applaude. The San Carlo Opera Company has won a marked and deserved success, though its audiences have come but little from that great American public whose heart, we are often and volubly assured, beats wildly for popular opera.

The fact is that opera in America is still either the plaything of the rich or the delight of the foreign-born. Our great middle class leaves it severely alone.

"Lucia" was given a vigorous but far from aristocratic performance. Signora Vaccari is not entirely at home in fioratura, but she gave vitality to Lucia" usually spallid figure. Signor cannot be appointed.
Furthermore, Parliament is stale, querulous, contentious and ineffective. The war has made a new world, while Parliament cannot wholly escape from the circumstances and conditions of its the circumstances and conditions of its birth. Thus even when it is remem-bered that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, oppos-ing an election two years ago, declared he would not "attempt to open the door of office with a bloody key," there is strong support for his argument that there should now be an appeal to the constituencies.

Soldiers To Be Enfranchised

A bill has passed both houses to enfranchise soldiers in training in England and in the trenches in France and Flanders. Under this measure all men in uniform, whether twenty-one years Signora Vaccari is hot she gave vitality to in foratura, but she gave vitality to Lucia's usually pallid figure. Signor Agostini shouted Edgardo's measures singling Mascagni, but in uniform, whether twenty-one years of age or not, or whether residents of Canada or not before enlistment, may exercise the franchise. It was insisted that many British subjects came from the United States to join Canadian regiments and that six months' service at the front was an adequate title to citizenship. These non-residents will vote in the constituencies in which they enlisted or rather their bailots will be as if he were singing Mascagni, but Signor Antola was really excellent as Ashton. If Donizetti and modern popular opera fail to unite in a complete marriage the age is to blame, not the San Carlo Opera Company.

izenship. These non-residents will vote in the constituencies in which they enlisted, or rather their ballots will be counted in such constituencies.

That it is difficult to poll the votes of soldiers in the field is admitted by the government. The opportunities for fraud and personation are manifold and almost irresistible. In a provincial general election for British Columbia a few months ago the soldiers overseavoted, but while no serious irregularities have been established there has been an official inquiry and there will be a subsequent report. In Alberta the provincial government provided for direct election of two members by the soldiers. In Saskatchewan provision was made for the election of three such members.

It is clear, however, that the troops would be far more influential if their ballots could be counted in the constituencies in which they resided before enlistment. In a close division a score of ballots might change the result the constituencies in which they resided before enlistment. In a close division a score of ballots might change the result decisively in a hundred constituencies. For this reason the government insists that the soldiers shall not be massed in fictitious divisions, but shall have their ballots distributed according to their bailots distributed according to residence in the 234 constituencies into which the Dominion is divided for elections and the Constituencies in which the Dominion is divided for elec-toral purposes.

To this the Opposition offered no-serious objection, but there was a vital difference of opinion over the proposal requiring the soldiers to mark their ballots for "Government" or "Op-position." Manifestly, however, there could be no intelligent voting for in-dividual candidates and the view of the government prevailed. In Canada Saloon Sites in "Dry" West government prevailed. In Canada there is simultaneous polling in every constituency, but a period of twenty-eight days will be set apart for voting in the campa in England and in the trenches. It is believed that this will give opportunity for the great majority of the troops to cast their ballots, even though individual regiments may actually be engaged in battle when polling berins. ST. what was the matter with the man. He seemed to have a remarkable ingenuity will follow the election. Until the votes of the soldiers are counted the result in many electoral divisions will be in doubt. It is assumed that the troops will boll heavily for the government, for the single reason that they favor conscription, to which the Opposition, under Sir Wilfrid Laurier, is opposed. In the Presidential contest of 1864 the soldiers in the field generally gave decisive majorities for Lincoln, and apparently there were no grave irregularities. Not only will the soldiers be entranchised for the impending general election in Canada, but certain "foreign" elements will be disfranchised. The colonies of Doukhobors and Mennonites in the Western provinces, who object to military service, will not be registered. There will also be disfranchisement of aliens born in enemy countries unless they have lived for more than fifteen years in Canada. Unquestionably the proposal to disfranchise enemy aliens will be sternly resisted by the Opposition, and free use of the cloture may be necessary to insure its adoption. In recent provincial elections in Western provinces the elements affected by this proposal generally supported Liberal candidates, and it is inconecivable that they would favor consciousity in revolucing.
